DURBAN, South Africa -Armed Indian vigilantes clashed repeatedly with black rioters here Friday. At least 30 more people were killed in what has now be-come the worst violence in the country since the current political unrest began 11 months ago.

Some of the worst lighting was in Phoenix township, northwest of Durban, where mobs from the two sides fought with rocks, clubs and machetes at the Gandhi Settlement, then looted and burned the site. The settlement was founded by Mohandas K. Gandhi, who led the independence movement in India after leaving South Africa in

FORT PORTAL, Uganda -This quiet town in western Ugan-da, in the shadow of what are called "the mountains of the moon," has been ruled by Toro kings, British colonists and several Ugandan govuments. Now it takes orders from a tall young man in camouflage

His nom de guerre is Fred Rwingema, and he is acting commander of the National Resistance Army, a guerrilla group led by former Defense Minister Yoweni Museveni. The group had been waging war for more than four years against the now-deposed Ugandan govern-ment of Milton Obote.

Mr. Rwingema led his troops into an unresisting Fort Portal on July 22, five days before the leader of the military coup, Brigadier Ba-silio Olara Okello, dispatched his Acholi soldiers to take Kampala.

who is not related to the brigadier, has offered Mr. Museveni four seats in a proposed 28-member cabinet. Mr. Museveni is holding out for higher stakes. He wants half the seats in the military council.

Mr. Museveni has been playing hard to get. At the time of the coup he was in Sweden, where he was thought to have gone on an armsbuying trip. Since then he has been sending messages to Uganda's new regime by unusual means, including an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp.

He was defense minister in the caretaker government that pre-pared the 1980 elections returning Mr. Obote to power. But he fared badly at the polls, coming in third. Since then, he has been waging a war against the government."

Two reporters, who traveled the 200 miles (380 kilometers) west from Kampala to Fort Portal after the town fell into guerrilla hands, found that the guerrillas operate freely throughout a large part of western Uganda.

LONDONDERRY. Northern Ireland - Ignoring a British ban for the second consecutive year, an American IRA sympathizer, Martin Galvin, sneaked into a funeral procession of about 2,000 mourners Friday and helped carry the coffin of an IRA man.

Mr. Galvin joined the procession for about 100 yards before disappearing back into the crowd. Police had little chance to arrest him, and there was a report that they were under orders not to try.

He appeared a second time in the city Friday evening, eluding the po-lice to meet with reporters for about 20 minutes.

Freed U.S. Activists Arrive in Nicaragua

SAN CARLOS, Nicaragua (AP) — Twenty-nine U.S. peace activists who said they were kidnapped Wednesday by rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government, and 18 journalists traveling with them, arrived here safely Friday after reportedly being held captive for a day in Costa Rica. The activists said they were freed Thursday.

The Witness-for Peace group said Friday that "independent auticommunist" rebels abducted their members at gumpoint Wednesday near an abandoned rebel camp. The group had been traveling on the San Juan River, which divides Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Based on radio conversations they had with the group, Witness for Peace spokeswomen in Managua had identified the rebels earlier as members of the Revolutionary Democratic Alliance, the second-largest

The activists were arrested after climbing fences around two Damsh air bases during demonstrations used to the autiversaries of the U.S. atomic bombings of the two Japanese cities

The police said they had orders from the Justice Ministry to expel the protesters. "But without passports it's very complicated to expel an alien," a police official said. About 40 demonstrators who did produce passports were expelled Thursday to Britain and West Germany. In Stockholm on Friday, seven demonstrators occupied the Danish Embassy for about seven hours to demand the activists' release.

8 Nations Consider a Warning to U.S.

LA PAZ (LAT)—A meeting of Latin American foreign ministers has been called to consider issning a regional warning to the United States against military intervention in Nicaragua.

The meeting, to be held Aug. 28-29 in Cartagena, Colombia, is an expanded version of the Contadora group. That group is comprised of Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezueia, which have been working together to forge a Central American peace and security agreement.

The foreign ministers of Brazil, Argentina, Peru and Urugnay — in La Paz for the manguration of President Victor Paz Estenssoro of Bolivia — met Tuesday with the foreign ministers of the Contadora nations. Also on hand were Presidents Raul Alfonsin of Argentina, Belisario Betancur of Colombia and Julio Maria Sanguinetti of Urugnay.

experts say their problems are being delayed, not solved.

When Congress returns from its summer recess it is to resume writing a new, four-year farm law to take effect in fiscal 1986, which starts Oct. 1. Members of Congress, like the administration, contend that reductions in the budget defi-cits would bring down interest rates and the dollar. They say this in turn would help farmers export their goods and reduce the government's spending for farm support.

But Congress has balked at re-ducing deficits by cutting federal spending for agriculture. Lawmak-ers fear that falling farm prices would force thousands of farmers out of spriculture. Beyond the problems of price and income supports, Congress and the administration now face In explaining the higher deficit projections, Mr. Wright told the president and cabinet that Congress used old economic assump-tions that showed stronger growth than has been experienced in recent months. Using the administration's latest assumptions, the deficit would be over $200 billion for the next two years. If the consensus of 40 well-known economists is used, the delicit would be over $200 billion for three years, he was quoted as saying.

A second reason for the higher deficits is the expectation that congressional appropriations may substantially exceed the budget resolution, and that Congress will vote supplemental appropriations in the next few years that were not countdeclines in land prices and in- ed in the resolution.

Finally, the new deficit estimates assume Congress may add more spending for such measures as the farm bill, toxic waste cleanup and food stamps next year, officials said

Summertime Tunes: Koch Lowers Boom

For bothers who can take the heat but not the din of pop-music hits and Coppertone ads, a beachhead of screnity has been established in New York this summer: radio-free zones.

Nearly a half-mile of the city's 14 miles (22.6 kilometers) of beaches and 15 of Central Park's 840 acres (338 hectares) are covered by the ban, which took effect May 27. People playing radios in these areas without carphones are subject to a $50 time and may have their radios impounded.

The law doesn't restrict your right to have a radio," said May-or Edward L Koch. "It simply restricts your right to play a radio in areas where it might annoy other people."

Large, heavy radios with powerful speakers, called "boom boxes" are the primary targets of the ban, established in response to hundreds of complaints in recent months, according to Henry J. Stein, the city's parks and recreation commissioner. Since the creation commissioner. Since the zones were established, said a spokesman for the parks department, six persons have been cited and nearly 50 warnings have been issued.

Public reaction to the ban has seen mixed. Some savor the si-

Ex-CIA Chief Criticizes White House for Aid To Nicaraguan Rebels

Campiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WASHINGTON - Members of Congress and the head of the CIA during the Carter administration have criticized the direct involvement of the National Security Council, a branch of the White House, in aiding anti-government rebel operations in Nicaragua.

The Reagan administration ac-knowledged Thursday that officials on the council were directly involved in aiding the insurgents, who are seeking to overthrow the Sandinist government in Nicara-

Administration officials and President Ronald Reagan said, however, that the administration had not violated U.S. laws regulat-ing covert operations or prohibit-ing direct American assistance to the rebels.

"It just makes it unmistakably clear that it's our war," said Representative Anthony C. Beilenson, a California Democrat and member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. "They are waging it in every way except with American troops.

Stansfield Turner, who headed the Central Intelligence Agency and was an adviser to the National Security Council as President Jimmy Carter's director of central intelligence, said that "it's most improper" for the National Security Council to play a role similar to one that Congress had barred the CIA from performing.
"It may not break the law," he said, "but it's ridiculous when the CIA had to be kept at arm's length from the contras to have another arm of government doing exactly the same thing."

The criticism came in response to news reports Thursday that the rebels, who are often referred to as contras, had been receiving direct military advice from officials on the council in an operation run by a military officer in the White House.

The reports said the officials had begun giving the advice last year after Congress refused Mr. Reagan's request for more military aid. Congress also barred any "agen-cy or entity of the United States involved in intelligence" from help-ing the rebels militarily. Representative George E. Brown Jr., a Democrat of California and member of the House intelligence committee, said the National Security Council was not exempt from the ban because the current CIA director, William J. Casey, also serves it as an adviser.

"They're up to their ears in intelligence," Mr. Brown said of the council, He added, however, that it would be difficult for Congress to investigate the council's role because the principle of executive privilege prevents presidential advisers from being forced to testify.

He said that, nonetheless, the intelligence committee and the House Judiciary Committee might investigate the council's role. He said its actions could involve "aiding and abetting violations of the Neutrality Act." which bars attacks on governments at peace with the United States.

Mr. Brown said the possible offenses "could be impeachable" if they were proved, but he doubted Congress would press an investigation that might lead to such a con-

"We're not violating any laws." Mr. Reagan said Thursday in signing legislation that provides $27 million in nonmilitary assistance to the rebels over the next two years. The measure was part of a $25.4-billion foreign aid bill. Larry Speakes, the White House

The People Can Complain

Zenger, publisher of New York's first independent newspaper, and Andrew Hamilton, his wily lawyer, Last Sunday, Aug. 4, was the 250th anniversary of the libel trial at which they turned common law on its head and established the freedom of America's press.

The Zenger legend dwells on the martyrdom of an immigrant printer abused by a tyrannical agent of the Crown. The legend thrives be-cause Zenger and Hamilton roused a city of 10,000 to their cause and, while their opponents sulked, had the wit to print the only secord of their heroics. But Governor William Cosby did run a land-grabbing, vote-rigging istration. His efforts to silence his critics provoked a crucial test of democratic principie. The Zenger case planted seeds that flowered half a century later in the First Amendment. It destroyed the pernicious doctrine that criticism of government is seditious even if true. It showed how juries, backed by public opinion, can enlarge the spirit of the law. Zenger was brought to New York from Bavaria in 1710 at the age of 13 and apprenfieed to the city's only printer, William Brad-ford, who gave him more craft than grammar and a taste for independence. In time Zenger opened his own shop on Smith Street, three blocks east of Broad Way, near Wall.

By 1733, with Bradford monopolizing the official printing work from Cosby, the new royal governor, Zenger turned to printing the broadsides of a liberal opposition, agitations that grew into pamphlets, finally a newspaper.
The New-York Weekly Journal listed Zenger as printer but its guiding spirit was James Alexander, a lawyer and mathematician who anonymously each Monday unleashed bold assaults on the governor's machinations.

The furious governor asked the Assembly to endorse a public burning of the paper, but it refused. He asked a grand jury to indict the upstart printer, but it refused. So Cosby had Zenger jailed on his own information. The charge was printing "false, scandalous, mali-cious and seditious" articles that had accused the governor of horrendous misrule threatening nothing less than "slavery."

Not for the last time did such overwrought opinion drive authority to overreaction. Cosby sent his henchman, Chief Justice James Delancey, to run the trial. Zenger's bail was set absurdly high and his jailers began drawing jurors from the bottom of the deck. A proper cey had disbarred Alexander for protesting too much. Little did he dream that this would bring Hamilton, the Colonies' foremost lawyer, riding to the rescue from Pennsylvania. Hamilton quickly confounded the case by conceding that Zenger had printed the offending papers. Since the judge and prosecutor were asking the jury only to confirm that fact, they stood triumphantly ready to receive a verdict, "apply" the libel law to the jury's finding of fact and pronounce sentence.

Yet Hamilton insisted that there could be no libel unless either the prosecutor proved the criticism false or the defense failed to prove it true. Nothing doing, ruled Delancey. When seditious words undermine authority, their truth is irrelevant: indeed, in such a case, "the greater the truth, the greater the libel."

If that hoary precept sounds absurd today, just substitute the words "national security" for "authority." When governors feel threatened by criticism, they are not easily deflected by its truth. That Americans learned to resist such censorship owes much to Hamilton's next move at this critical moment in the trial.

Turning his back to the chief justice, he announced, "Then, gentlemen of the jury, it is to you we must now appeal." If his evidence of truth was to be suppressed, why, that was his best evidence. And whether words are libelous surely depends on how they are understood. If upstanding New Yorkers understood the Jour-nal's words to be true, how could those words be condemned as scandalous?

Judges may understand the words differently, Hamilton argued, but citizens have a "natural" right to complain, and duty to protect every citizen's privilege of truthful complaint. "Of what use is this mighty privilege if every man that suffers is [kept] silent? And if a man must be taken up as a libeler for telling his sufferings to his neighbor?"

The jury "in small time" ruled not guilty. Whereupon, while "a mixture of amazement, terror and wrath appeared in the bench," the "jubilant crowd then adjourned to the Black Horse Tavera to celebrate."

Across the ages, then, an added toast: To the Zenger jury, for registering the public's understanding of a vital yet always difficult American idea — that the freedom of the press to challenge authority and convey complaints of the citizenry is indispensable in a free society. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Rest for Marginal Land

In the 1970s, American farmers were led by same time it would prevent gullying of land government policies and favorable markets to expand their production enormously, mainly Ior export. They did so partly by moving onto marginal lands. The result is that about an tighth of the land now in agricultural production across the country is highly erodible. The farmers probably should not be using it. Cerfainly the government should not be subsidizing them to use it, not in a time of towering surpluses and budget-bending support costs. But that is what it has been doing.

. - Now, however, Congress and the administration have fastened on the good idea of doing the opposite. In a major reversal of policy, they would pay farmers to restore the land, setting up what is called a conservation reserve. The bull now in the House Agriculture Committee would create a reserve of 25 million acres (10.1 million hectares), about half the 53 million considered erodible. The Senate bill calls for earlier had said a reserve was too costly, has shifted position and favors 20 million. The argument in favor is that a reserve is a rare opportunity to marry economic and envinonmental concerns; it would achieve both price support and soil conservation. The goverrument already imposes acreage set-asides each year to limit production of staple crops and prop up prices. The reserve would come on top of these, and augment them. At the

and silting-up of streams. Would-be partici-pants would bid against each other; the government would sign with those offering to leave their land idle for the least amounts per acre per year. The government would share the cost of putting the land back into grass and timber. The estimated total cost is about the same as continued production subsidies.

There is always a certain awkwardness in giving people money not to do things, and especially in paying them not to misbehave. Here the government would be paying farmers to stop abusing their own land; in a sense a reserve program would be rewarding past greed. But the government was complicit in the expansion of the 1970s, when grain exports were seen as a way to finance oil imports: and soil erosion is now a national environmental problem, requiring a national solution.

The farm bills in both houses remain stuck road issue that has held them up all year. These are bad times in the Farm Belt. The committees must nevertheless reduce price supports both to make U.S. products competitive in world markets and to stay within budget guidelines. It is a difficult political task, but the reserves that both bills now contain should make it easier. They can serve as balms to the farmers as well as to the land.

Other Opinion

China on Nuclear Disarmament

Even if the two superpowers were sincere in demonstrating willingness to reduce nuclear weapons, limited reduction would have no practical significance at all. Both the superpowers already have enough nuclear weapons to destroy the world several times over. Deng Xiaoping said rightly last week that China uphoids two cardinal principles regarding nuclear disarmament. First, the two superpowers should undertake not to be the first to use nuclear weapons. Second, they should reduce their nuclear arsenals step by step until all such weapons have been destroyed. People around the world cannot feel reassured unless and until agreement is reached on the above two principles between the Soviet Union and the United States. China is ready to do its share in contributing toward the reduction of nuclear arms if the superpowers take the lead. China is against the "star wars" proposal. Outer space is an asset shared by all humanity. All military activity there should be categori-cally banned. While the Soviet Union opposes the [U.S.] Strategic Defense Initiative, it has long been engaged in similar research itself. - The China Daily (Beijing).

1910: Mayor of New York Is Shot NEW YORK - Mayor William J. Gaynor was shot and seriously wounded [on Ang. 9], when about to go aboard the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, by J.J. Gallagher, a recently discharged employe of the Department of Docks. It is stated that Mr. Gaynor's condition is satisfactory, pending an operation. Photogra-phers had just aimed their cameras at Mayor Gaynor when a heavily built man with a Panaand hat pushed forward, drawing a revolver. One shot was fired almost in the face of Robert Adamson, the Mayor's secretary. A second was fired at the back of Mr. Gaynor's head and struck the neck. "I shot him because he took the bread out of my mouth," Gallagher said. New York was appalled by the attempted assassination. The news created a sensation comparable only to Presidential tragedies.

Lee, shows how lasting are the hatreds engendered by such wars. Fair warning, civil wars are expensive playthings. Our Civil War set back the clock on the South for a hundred years, 'freed' its slaves to new misery, gave new lease of power to greed in the North, made possible vast accumulations of wealth, let in millions of new slaves from Europe to serve this wealth. Today the old battle is raging on the same old front. Mr. Roosevelt is trying to meet it by acting as arbitrator between wealth and the slaves. The 'Vast Sea of Chinese' Threatens to Swamp Tibet

By any social, moral, religious or legal standards, the theft of the belongings of one individual by another is strongly condemned. Surely when such robbery is committed by one race against another this must be a crime of immense magnitude.

I am pleased at the slight improvement of conditions that has taken place in Tibet since 1979. More food is available, a small degree of economic freedom has been reintroduced and the movement of people is less restricted. I am also encouraged to note that the Chinese leaders are more open-minded and moderate today than in the past. I hope that they will try to better understand the situation in Tibet and will adopt a policy that is both pragmatic and morally principled.

Fulfillment of the basic needs of food, shelter and clothing are not sufficient for humans. Animals probably experience a sense of satisfaction when they are fed, shel-tered and kindly treated, even if it is temporary. But in human society, freedom is a basic d, an inalienable right that can never be replaced by temporary improvements in food supplies and economic conditions.

Tibetans are not against the Chinese peo-ple. All we demand is that which is rightfully ours. We believe that the Chinese, too, have a right to happiness and prosperity, but not at the expense of another nation and people. China does not possess any right whatsoever to decide the fate of the Tibetan people.

Recently the Chinese have been taking some interest in Tibet's history. This is good Just as it is important that Chinese history is based on Chinese records, so it is important that Tibetan history be based on Tibetan records. Not a single Tibetan record sames that Tibet has ever been a part of China: There have certainly been periods in the past when the Mongols and the Man wielded some influence over Tibet. But is there a nation in the world that has not, at one time or another, been subjected to the infinence of outside powers, whether military, political, cultural or religious! Stronger powers have used, and at times still do not; their influence in an aggressive way to advance claims of sovereignty over weaker nations. But such claims have no basis and such actions cannot confer sovereignty.

It is my view that the issue of Tibet is not the concern of the six million Tibetans alone. Because of Tibet's age-old ties with its neighbors and its strategic importance, what hap-pens in and to Tibet has a direct and signifi-cant impact on the region and the world. The future of Tibet is therefore certainly not for the Chinese alone to decide as they please.

Throughout the history of mankind, solu-tions achieved by force have inevitably been transitory. A solution can be genuine and lasting only if and when it is to the full satisfaction of the people concerned. In the final analysis, it should be for the concerned people themselves, in this case the Tibetans, to decide what they want. I have always believed that human determination and any cause that is truly just will ultimately triumph.

The War Is Over and Interdependence Remains to Be Learned

WASHINGTON — Between 1960 and 1980 the proportion of Japanese homes with telephones rose from 2 to 77 percent. Grasp that one remarkable statistic and you can fathom the gathering crisis in American-Japanese relations. Societies need time to adapt to change, and the rapidity of Japan's economic rise has been too fast for both countries.

It is difficult to be optimistic. The irresistible force of American prejudice and the immovable object of Japanese inertia seem bent on collid-ing. In the U.S. Congress, protection-ism — shortsighted and self-defeating - is in the air. In Japan, tardy and insufficient "action programs" to overhaul its economy fan American anger. At best, these efforts will take time to produce the higher Japanese imports and higher Japanese eco-nomic growth that Americans want:

at worst, the results may be meager. Both sides are prisoners of their pasts. Japan's trade surpluses are commonly blamed on protectionism, but this is a half-truth. The central cause of those excessive surpluses is an archaic financial system geared to an earlier era of underdevelopment; perpetuated into the present, it perversely restrains domestic expansion and spurs the search for expert markets. On the U.S. side, resentment of Japanese success has become an obsession that grossly exaggerates Japan's role in economic problems. Writing in The New York Times Magazine, for example, Theodore H. White — author of The Making of the President" series - accuses Japan of "dismantling American indus-try." If it continues, he broods, Japan will have "finally won the war."

The war? Wasn't it fought for something greater than global market shares? Never mind, for Mr. White reflects America's raw mood: He dislikes the Japanese. As a young reporter in China he was shot at by Japanese. His Japanese are still soldiers, not people. They are "on the offen-sive," "wiping out" American indus-tries. You sense that he wants B-29s to wipe out their factories.

His story is less important for its content, which is unoriginal, than for who he is. As one of America's premier journalists, he legitimizes eco-nomic scapegoating. But his powerful polemic is sloppy reporting. It ex-cludes facts that put Japan's performance in a larger context.

Japan is not the major cause of America's trade deficit, and the deficit is not eliminating American in-dustry. The strong dollar and rapid American growth are critical causes. Between 1981 and 1984 an $8.7-billion trade surplus with Europe be-came a $13.3-billion deficit. The deficit with Japan, although rising in dollar terms, dropped from 45 to 30 percent of the total during that peri-od. And, despite the delicit, American industrial production in 1984 reached record levels. Trade is not the only problem of distressed U.S. industries. Use of plastics, aluminum and reinforced concrete has cut demand for steel; steel use (including imports) was about a fifth less in 1984 than the 1973 peak. And Japanese steel is only a quarter of all imports.

The distress in the semiconductor industry mainly reflects disappointing personal computer sales. Despite recent advances, Japanese

By Robert J. Samuelson fifth below America's. Japan's efficient global industries coexist along, with far less efficient service and retail sectors. Many Japanese still work five and a half or six days a week. So Japan is not quite the economic juggernaut of American fantasy. But it still harms the world economy. Since 1980 it has grown slowly at home and relied on exports for stimulus, but it needs to grow faster domestically so as to import more.

Interest on consumer deposits has long been held down by law. Paradoxically, this restraint stimulated saving because consumers, earning less on their deposits, had to save living standards remain more than a more to meet their personal objectives - buy a home, send children to college, enjoy retirement.

Saving has also been spurred by restricted consumer lending. In the 1960s and early 70s, when business investment absorbed these vast savings, Japan grew rapidly. Inending Japan's economic backwardness. But now the high-savings policy is backfiring. Consumer deposit rates are still artificially low, but domestic investment is not absorbing all the savings. The excess is invested in higher-yielding foreign — mainly U.S. dollar — securities. Domestic growth suffers because is depressed, making Japanese exports more competitive.

Low growth and high exports abet protectionism and create an anti-growth cycle. Breaking this cycle re-quires Japan to deregulate interest rates and liberalize consumer boxrowing. It is doing so at a snail's pace.

Outsiders are right to press Japan for more open markets, and Japan could do more. But the paramount issue is global economic growth. Growth lubricates open markets and resists protectionism; it makes change easier. Unfortunately, in an interdependent world, growth is hostage to rigid national policies — and to how they interact. America is no model. Its budget deficits and tax code (which subsidizes borrowing through interest deductions) prop up interest rates and thereby draw foreign currencies into dollar securities. America's mistakes compound Japan's errors.

The central problem is the paraly sis of old identities.

Japan cannot move energetically and independently. It retains the protective mentality of a poor nation. It acts selfishly and invites resentment. For Americans, Japan is only a symptom of deeper change. America's industries do face global competition, and the world economy is unsettling, but Americans are too wounded by the loss of their economic primacy to grasp the more subtle demands of global interdependence. America's imagery is increasingly savage. The vision of relighting World War II is mindless jingoism. When men of Teddy White's stature exploit this sleazy rhetoric, you know you are on a slippery slope.

not imported the goods and services, it would have produced them at home. That is almost certainly not true. It is now producing as much as it can produce. It has had a big increase in employment since 1980. Unemployment has been stable at around 7.2 percent of the labor force for about a year, while inflation has been steady. This suggests that the country is close to the lowest unemployment rate consistent with avoiding a speeding up of inflation.

Growth of real output at an annual rate of 2.6 percent since 1980 was probably as much as could be expect-ed, given the need to go through a period of disinflation and the failure to recover from the slump of productivity growth that began about 10 years ago. Growth of the economy has not been held down by deficiency of demand. If there had been a reasonable expectation that faster growth of demand would yield more real output without more inflation, domestic monetary policy could have provided that. In a real sense America wanted the rate of growth of real output that it got, either because a higher rate was not achieved. cause it could not have been achieved without a dangerous inflation.

rest of the world has mainly supplied goods and services that the United States would not have produced if it had been imable to import them. The second point that will be made is that the rest of the world did not give America these goods and services — they loaned them. Japan and other trading partners invested in the United States, lending the money to buy the goods and services from them. America made a decision to borrow when it decided on a budget deficit and a tax policy that stimulated business borrowing for invest-ment. The rest of the world made it easier by being willing to lead.

It is surely not the responsibility of Japan to "discipline" America by refusing to lead the money it wants to borrow. Any American who doesn't want to be part of this borrowing process can opt out of it by saving more and becoming a creditor. He can write his congressman and his president urging them to reduce the budget delicit. But as long as Ameri-cans are in the market to borrow, they should be grateful to those who will lead to them. And as long as they want to use more goods and services than they produce, they should be grateful to those who provide there.

remind me of camp, college, trips. And also of my father's humor, the rhythms of my mother's daily life, the code words of adolescent friendships (S.W.A.K., sealed with a kiss), the intimacy of the young.
My friends, my family and I rarely mail our thoughts anymore. The

If we called from camp or campus our parents would answer the phone with "What's wrong?" Today our children have grown up knowing area codes before they knew addition. They bounce intercontinental calls off satellites just to say "Hello." By Ellen Goodman

I am not railing against this pro-gress. A frequent dialer with the bills to prove it. I often choose the give and take, the immediacy of the phone. I accept charges from chil-dren with an uneconomical glee. A friend and I, separated by hundreds of miles, have declared our phone bills "cheaper than therapy." It's good to hear a voice.

But it isn't the same, Sometimes I think that the telephone call is as earthbound as daily dialogue, while a letter is an ex-change of gifts. On the telephone you talk; in a letter you tell. There is a pace to the writing and reading of letters that does not come from the telephone company but from our own inner rhythm.

We live mostly in the hi-tech, reach-out-and-touch-someone modern world. Communication is an industry. It makes demands of us. We are expected to respond as quickly as computers. A voice asks a question across the ocean in a split second and we are supposed to formulate an answer at this high-speed rate of exchange.

But we cannot, blessedly, "interface" by mail. There is leisure and emotional luxury in letter writing. There are no obvious silences to auxiously fill. There are no inter-want to remember?

nuances and tones of voice to distract. A letter does not take us by surprise in the middle of dinner, or intrude when we are with other people, or ambush us in the midst of other thoughts. It waits. There is a private space between the give and the take for thinking.

I have known lovers, parents and children, husbands and wives, who send each other letters from one room to another simply for the chance to complete a story of events, thoughts, feelings. I have known people who could not bear to "hear" what they could read. There is this advantage to slowing down the pace of communications. The phone demands a kind of simultaneous satisfaction that is as elusive in words as in sex. Letters let us take turns, let us sit and mull and say exactly what we mean. Today we are supposed to travel light, to live in the moment. The past is, we are told, excess baggage. There is no question that the phone is the tool of these times. As fine and as ephemeral as a good meal-But you cannot hold a call in your hands. the demand was relaxed after Naga-saki; surrender thereupon came. The Russians, in consultation with Churchill and Roosevelt, promised to invade Japan. Without consulting the Russians, the United States bombed Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The United States was preparing to invade Japan, but not until November three months after the bombings

The meaning of these and other facts was set forth explicitly not first in the 1960s and '70s but in 1948, by P.M.S. Blackett, a Nobel Prize winning British physicist, in his book "Military and Political Consequences of Atomic Energy" (published in the United States under the title "Fear, War and the Bomb"): "So we may conclude that the dropping of the bombs was not so much the last military act of the Second World War as the first major operation of the cold diplomatic war with Russia."

General Leslie Groves, testifying

later at the Oppenheimer hearings, said: "There was never, from about two weeks from the time I took charge [of the atomic bomb project], any illusion on my part that Russia was our enemy, and the Project was conducted on that basis."

DEXTER MASTERS. Totnes, England.

The atomic bomb contributed to shaping world trade as we know it. On Aug. 8, between the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the Soviet Union declared war on Japan, and the next day it invaded Manchinia. Shortly before, at Potsdam it had been revealed that Stalin's voracious appente for territory included Japan. Had his Red Army invaded Japan, 25 was to be expected, Japan might still

There is a stillness about Finland that foreigner visitors find almost eerie. It is as if 4.9 million Finns had settled into a state of unanimous serenity.

Homogeneity has something to do with it. The population is 89.8 percent Lutheran, 93.6 percent Finnish-speaking and overwhelmingly blond. But this also is a country of the happy medium. Heisinki is an attractive capital of almost half a million people, not too big, not too small. People are reserved but pleasant, efficient but not officious. Restaurants are crowded, but there almost always is a table

Finns, like Russians, do not jaywalk. They will wait for the green light even on an empty street. And even the punk crowd wears fash-ionable passels.

In the past decade, politicians of virtually all persuasions have come to share the view that Finland is better off promoting good relations with its giant neighbor.

In the 1960s, Finland's unique relations with Moscow gave rise to the term "Finlandization," a concept used in Western Europe to warn against crippling neutrality and gradual loss of autonomy.

The pejorative use of the term brought protests from Finnish embassies, and now it is heard less often. But for many Finns, the ac-commodations with Moscow are easily defended.

Friland lost its fight against the Soviet Union in World War II and shares a border 762 miles long. Furthermore, trade with the Soviet Union is a key factor in protecting the Finnish economy from the bufleting of Western recessions.

The 10th anniversary celebration last week of the signing of the Hel-sinki accords on European security and human rights was an affirmation of success at balancing between East and West.

Bonn Rebuts Prosecutor In Spy Probe Of Secretary

BONN - The West German government rebutted on Friday reports that the vanished secretary of Economics Minister Martin Bange

Christie's Scandal Underlines Mutual Dependence of Dealers, Auction Houses

HE discovery that a top Christie's executive I faisely stated in 1981 that two paintings had been sold has provoked outrage. Auction houses have lied in other cases, critics say. Some dealers pounced on the occasion to accuse auction houses of systematically raising SOUREN MELIKIAN

prices by using what is known as the reserve system — the auctioneer secretly agrees with the consignor to outbid any would-be buyer until a minimum price is reached.

The case made against the auction house, however, has left out the real problem, without which the incident would not have happened the symbiotic relationship that has developed between auction houses and dealers over the past 15 years or so.

In May 1981, a heavily publicized auction of eight Impressionist paintings was held at Chris-tie's in New York. They were sent for sale by Dimitry Jodidio, a financier, operating through his company Cristallina SA of Lansanne, Switzerland. Jodidio, a one-time adviser of the late Florence Gould, is reported by those who have met him in the art world to have had close boost sales. If Bathurst intended to "protect the market," his was a half-hearted attempt. It nevprofessional contacts with one of the three lead- er stood a chance of working. The Cristallina flop probawas sold, for what was then a huge price, $2.2 million. All the others remained unsold, including a landscape by Van Gogh of houses lining a village street and a still life by Paul Gaugum. After the sale, however, David Bathurst, then Christie's New York president, announced that these two paintings had been sold. When taken to court by Cristallina, Bathurst said his aim had been to protect the market and the consignor. To quote his deposition, "if a picture, any work of art, is offered for anction and is bought in, it makes it tougher to sell it afterwards." No professional would disagree in principle. One point that has been overlooked is that while Bathurst lied to the press, Christie's did not consistently back up his statement. A press release issued in New York said the two paintings had been sold. Within days, most dealers and other buyers with a potential interest in such paintings knew or suspected the truth.

Christie's did not illustrate or mention the unsold Gauguin and Van Gogh in its "Review of the Season," the glossy art-paper album it publishes every fall to celebrate its leats and thus was a long wait until the Havemayer sale in May 1983, also at Sotheby's, New York, where huge prices were registered once again.

Times were so hard during the 1981-82 season that Sotherby's was in the red for the first time in decades. Not much has been said about this tempts at manipulating the market of which the nuction houses have been accused.

The most startling omission in accounts of the Bathurst case has been that of the dealer's role.

Auction houses naturally prefer big prices because the 10 percent they levy on buyers — 8 percent in the case of Christie's London — and the varying percentages they extract from sellers the auction houses do without them, are proportionately bigger. Above all, rising For dealers desperate for cash or s prices induce art owners to sell, which is what auction houses are really concerned about.

But those who benefit most from price boosting are not, as has been suggested, the anction houses but those who get the full price - the vendors. With increasing frequency, these tend to be dealers and "investors," a refined word commercial sources are included. Here is an

That is the fundamental problem: Dealers now use to the full the auction system to sell their wares. They cannot do without it, nor can

For dealers desperate for cash or stuck with an unwanted work of art, selling by auction is the answer. My guess is that half of what is churned out by auction bouses, particularly in Impressionist and Modern Master sales, comes from dealers.

> For auction houses, the involvement of dealers in the auction system as a source of goods for sale is a necessary evil. The unprecendented expansion of art buying in the 1970s has dried up the supply. Certain categories have disappeared from the market. Prices have risen, as have auction-house overheads as a result of attempts to attract vendors, and things have been made correspondingly easier for dealers trying to force high reserves on auction houses. Fraditional dealers are careful, new investors less so. As long as the system works, there are no complaints: The public never hears about the coups pulled off by dealers at auction. Here is

A Bicentennial Homage to Audubon

By Max Wykes-Joyce L ONDON — Of the great nam-ral-history artists, John James Andubon (1785-1851) could have been considered the artist least likely to succeed. Indeed, he was thus considered by his contempo-raties until his 53d year, when his monumental "The Birds of America," with its 435 color plates, was

The bicentennial of his birth is being celebrated at the Natural History Museum in "Drawn from Nature," an exhibition tracing his life and work and placing him in the context of other naturalists.

He was born Jean Jacques Fongère Audubon, the illegitimate son of a French sea captain who was the owner of a plantation on Santo Domingo, now Haiti. His mother, a Creole woman, died soon after his birth. He was taken to France and adopted by Captain Audibon's childless wife. At 18 he was sent to the United States to administer his father's properties at Mill Grove, Pennysivania, and to avoid conscription into Napoleon's army. There he met and eventually married Lucy Bakewell, a young English woman who was an amateur ornithologist. Her interest had probably been encouraged by the Bakewell family doctor in England. Before their marriage, Audubon and Lncy used bird-watching as a convenient reason to meet in the countryside. Audubon waxed lyncal about his earliest excursions into omithology. He wrote of discovering a nest of phoebes, a not overly colorful bird that lays a pristime white egg — "so white and so transparent, the sight was more pleasant than if I had met with a diamond the same size." He must have had an exceptionally rare skill with wild birds, for the phoche allowed him to lift her from the nest to examine the nestlings.

Being unskilled at estate administration, and anxious to wed Lucy, raphy." In the grounds of one manhe returned to France, hoping to persuade his father to finance some kind of business. The captain did so, on condition that John James went into partnership in a store with one Ferdinand Rozier. Back in the United States, Audubon left to Rozier the organization of their store and became an apprentice clerk in New York for Benjamin

That store and another one failed and the partnership was dissolved. Audubon and Lucy's brother Thomas opened a store that was moderately successful for some years, but Audubon's

As his sheaf of bird images grew. the business suffered Audubon also persuaded people to invest in all manner of projects, such as a steamship with which he lost a lot of money for George Keats, brother of the English poet John Keats, and a sawmill at whose failure in 1819 he was jailed for debt and declared bankrupt.

He and Lucy by now had two sons. Audubon eked out a living as an innerant portrait painter and drawing master, aided by Lucy's earnings as a governess and teacher, but spent most of his time painting birds and compiling the field notes that ultimately became his five-volume "Omithological Biogsion, where he was tutor to a teenage heiress ("a well-formed girl but not handsome," his artist's eye told him), he drew, painted and annotated nine different birds, including the American redstart, the Tennessee warbler and the Mississippi

Each spring to fall from 1820 to 1826 he went on field trips, pausing in the first months of 1824 to visit Philadelphia and New York in the hope of finding a publisher who would produce his work. It evoked much admiration but no concrete support. After two more years of travel, he borrowed $1,600 that Lucy had contrived to save, and set sail for Britain with more than 400 sketches and drawings.

He was fortunate in London to come upon a team of father and son, both named Robert Havell, who added aquatint to engraving, the better to reproduce the rich colors and textures of plumage and habitat so carefully portrayed

When he commissioned the work from the Havells, fewer than half his paintings were in reproducible form, so Andribon returned to the United States and renewed his wanderings, sending batches of killing it and posing the body. Au-dubon never killed a bird when live the Havells engraved copper plates observation proved sufficient, as in to fit the largest format of printing the case of the "Snowy Owl." These remained the property of Audubon and his family, and were taken in 1839 by the emigrating Robert Havell to New York, Some were destroyed by fire a few years later. In 1871, Lucy Audubon, by then a penurious widow, sold many of the remaining plates, most for their scrap metal value.

Some were rescued from the smelter's furnace and in 1885 presented to the American Museum of

onal Herald Tribuie MARSEILLE — Despite Par-is's blockbuster shows and scores of museums and galleries, the capital is not the only place in France to view art this summer. The arts have been becoming more dynamic in the south of France in recent years, as witness a number of shows on view in the region. A visit to the "New York 85" exhibition organized by an ambitious new gallery in Marseille brought to mind a remark by the curator of a major American museum attending a recent UNESCO symposium: "The public is under a misapprehension about big international exhibitions. It supposes it is looking at the best art currently being produced. In fact, however, it is only being shown the constellation of power actually dominant in the art world."

For "New York 85," at the gallery founded and directed by an energetic young businessman, Roger Pailhas, 37 artists (30 American, three French, two Italian, one German and the cosmopolitan Christo) who work in New York were selected with the advice and support of Leo Castelli, one of the most influential dealers in New York.

The "New York 85" title is misleading since it is essentially Castelhis New York that is on view, and the selection, while eclectic up to a Natural History. Six of these plates a fund for natural history research point, can not claim to represent much more than that. Each artist is showing one work. There are also 23 works by stars of former decades Pop, Conceptual and Minimal including Jasper Johns, Roy Lichtenstein, Andy Warhol, Carl André and Sol Lewitt. The younger generation of American artists includes New Expressionists and graffiti artists two tendencies that have enjoyed Castelli's support from the outset (Julian Schnabel and Loren Munk are among the former, Jean-Michel Basquiat and Keith Haring among the latter).

It is pretty well established that the New Expressionism — which assumes different names and accents in Germany, Italy, France, the U.S. — is a commercially strong tendency, generally marked by a self-assertive, free-wheeling and extraordinarily aggressive subjectivity, an expression of private paradoxically to be devoid both of true fantasy and of content. This does not apply to the graffiti artists, whose work is not necessarily pretentious though it tends to perbeived as such in this context.

What we have here, then, with a few exceptions, is a display of established celebrities of recent dein common with that of Toulouse Lautrec, in part because of the way he uses artificial light in his numer ous portraits of women, though Van Dongen is less tart and comes more easily under the feminine spell. Women are, without a doubt, his chief theme. Thirty of the paintings presented here are portraits or nudes, but only a few represent men. Nor is there any stereotype in his treatment of the subject; his women are strongly individualized and present a broad variety of characters and moods.

Economic Gap is Widening Among American Blacks

By CLENN C. LOURY New York Times Service

EW YORK - Although a matter of some dispute, it appears to many observers that there is a growing disparity in economic status among American blacks. The class structure of the black population seems to be changing in a manner that has important political and policy implications. It looks as though blacks are increasingly divided between a relatively prosperous (by historical standards) middle class and an ever more desperate underclass.

That the nature of racial inequality has changed in the past two desiries is criticales. Today for blacks and white alike accounts.

decades is quite clear. Today, for blacks and whites alike, poverty is much more closely linked to family structure than was the case in 1960. The poor have come to consist mainly of women without a husband present and their children, while povcity rates among two-parent families have been reduced dramatically.

But female-headed families are substantially more comwhites. Although the prevalence of such families has been increasing for both races, the gap between blacks and whites in percentage of single-parent families has grown wider. This factor has thus become more important in explaining economic differences between black and white fam-

On the other hand, a traditional source of racial disparity employment discrimination — has diminished in significance during this period. The passage of civil rights legislation and the growth in enforcement activity by the courts and the state and federal equal employment agencies have undermined the ability of private employers to discriminate in wages paid to their black

TATISTICAL studies of discrimination uniformly shows significant reduction over the past two decades in the gap between black and white workers compensation not accounted for by productivity differences. Indeed, in some specialized, highly skilled segments of the labor market, there may now be a slight premium paid to black workers. Thus it is at least arguable that, in some important respects, economic and social class position has become more important than race per se in accounting for black-white disparities.

A history of racism and discrimination has helped to create an inner-city underclass that, because of economic and technological developments in American society at large, has become much more difficult to integrate into the economic mainstream than the urban poor of previous years.

For blacks with job skills or a high level of educational attainment, many if not all of the historic barriers to achieving parity with whites have been removed. For those blacks who remain poorly educated and trapped in urban ghettoes, however, enormous problems remain. This distinction, between the economic positions of the black middle class and the black underclass, has great importance for the formulation of public policy.

The key issue here is whether the extensive activities undertaken by government to promote racial economic equality actually for the acquired company.

Kohlberg and several other concerns have completed so many buyouts in the past few years that they have quietly built up stables of diverse companies, just as the conglomerate builders did in the 1960s.

And the resemblance to those empire builders has become even more striking of late, with Storer Communications Inc.'s acceptance last week of Kohlberg's $2.03-billion takeover bid.

Until recently, nearly all of the acquisitions by the buyout concerns had been of private companies or divisions of public companies. Lately, however, they have been going after large, widely known and often publicly owned companies, such as Storer, and they have frequently been involved in well-publicized bidding wars. Kohlberg beat out Comcast Corp. to add Storer to its collection of 17 companies.

Similarly, Wesray Corp., an-other major buyout concern, which has more than 15 companies under its wing, recently completed two highly visible ac-

The way a leveraged buyout works is that money is borrowed to make the purchase and is repaid out of the company's cash flow or by selling assets. The buyout companies are go-

Sir Clive — designer of the elecabandoning its proposed rescue of Sinclair Research Ltd., the ailing British maker of home computers.

A spokesman for Pergamon Press Ltd. said that after detailed study, the proposed takeover of Sinclair Research could not go ahead. The proposal involved a capital injection of £12 million ($16.2 million).

Sir Clive Sinclair, the British inventor who founded and controls Sinclair Research, said Friday that the buyout no longer was necessary because of recent sales.

He said that Sinclair Research recently signed a contract with Dixons Group PLC, the British photographic and electric-goods concerns, worth £10 million over the next three months.

"Our problems were always of a short-term nature and whilst we were grateful to Bob Maxwell for his support, we are happy to be continuing as an independent company," Sir Clive said.

Sinclair Research was hurt last winter by low demand for home computers. A bid to seek a public quotation for the company's shares on the London Stock Exchange earlier this year had to be abandoned.

In May, cash flow problems at-tributed to high inventory levels forced Sinclair Research to ask its main suppliers, Thorn-EMI PLC and Timex Corp.'s British unit, for

2 Are Named Chiefs at First Interstate

By Brenda Erdmann

International Herald Tribune

LONDON — First Interstate Capital Markets Ltd. in London said that Allan S. Wilson and Wil-liam A. Page will become joint chief executives. Mr. Wilson will be responsible for the bank's security trading and sales, swaps and corporate-finance activities.

Mr. Page will focus on expanding the bank's client-marketing ef-forts globally, as well as managing the increasing integration of the bank's activities with those of its parent, First Interstate Bank Ltd. These changes follow the previously announced assignments of two former managing directors of First Interstate Capital Markets, Kenneth Cunningham and David Gates, to First Interstate Bank Ltd.

STC Turns to Lord Keith For a Change in Direction

By Bob Hagerry International Herald Tribune LONDON — Lord Keith of Castleacte opened his first news conference as chairman of STC PLC on Friday by muttering: "You're about as surprised to see me sitting here as I am to be here."

Five years ago, upon retirement as chairman of the merchant bank of Hill Samuel, he told an interviewer, "I don't want to run anything any-more." But last week STC's board decided it needed a sud-den change of direction and turned to Lord Keith, who turns 69 later this month and had served as an outside direc-tor of the company since 1977. One of his first tasks is to find a chief executive to succeed the departed Sir Kenneth Corfield. Until someone is found, Lord Keith is acting as chief executive and overseeing a review of the direction for the maker of telecommunications equipment and computers.

It is not the first time that he has been called in to clean house - he took over as chairman of Rolls-Royce Ltd. in 1972, shortly after the government acquired that maker of airplane engines in a rescue package.

Under Lord Keith, the com-for most of the 1970s. But in 1979 and 1980, Lord Keith's final two years before retire-ment, Rolls-Royce slipped deeply into the red, sapped by a combination of recession and the soaring British pound, which choked off exports.

After studying to be an ac-countant and winning the Croix de Guerre while serving in the Welsh Guards during World War II, Lord Keith spent most of his career in merchant banking. He oversaw the 1965 merger of Philip Hill & Partners with M. Samuel & Co., which creat-

General Electric competed with Rolls Royce of Britain for the con-tract and won despite a lower price by Rolls Royce, the industry analyst said. The analyst said the sale of the five engines to the Chinese was just the beginning of what was expected to be contracts for engines and related equipment gines and related equipment amounting to "several hundred millions" of dollars.

In the initial stage, four of the engines would go into two navy destroyers to be built by a ship design institute in Wuhan, he said. These would be prototype, or pilot project, engines, the specialist said. The General Electric sale surprised some industry observers, he-prised some industry observers, because it was agreed upon at a time of tighter controls over Chinese foreign exchange reserves and fol-lowed a failure to agree on a U.S. Navy port call to China.

U.S. diplomats said talks were

Fexas Air Increases Bid for TWA

HOUSTON - Texas Air Corp. accessed on Friday its offer to acmire Trans World Airlines Inc. by 37a share to $26, further escalating the takeover battle for the New York-based carrier, The latest offer by Texas Air, the parent of Continental Airlines, was made by Texas Air's chairman, Frank A. Lorenzo. It tops a $24-a-share trid for TWA made earlier this week by Carl C. Icahn, the New York issancier.

Texas Air already has an agreement to acquire TWA. It was Mr. caha's purchase earlier this year of percent of TWA's common atock and a subsequent offer to buy the airline, that drove TWA to buy use anime, that drove I wA to accept the offer from Texas Air.

TWA's common stock closed Friday at $22.50 a share, up 25 cents, in New York Stock Exchange trading.

Further complicating the TWA battle was the announcement Thursday that a group of TWA employees, aided by a former Missouri governor, Christopher Bond, is considering making an offer to acquire TWA

The group is poised to make the offer because it received commit-ments "in the range of $1 billion" from U.S. and European lenders, said John Kreamer, a senior part-ner with the Kansas City law firm of Gage & Tucker, where Mr. Bond also is a partner. Mr. Kreamer deed to identify the lenders. Mr. Bond said he was leading the employees' effort because they fear TWA would be dismantled if acquired by either by Mr. Icahn or Mr. Lorenzo, thereby jeopardizing TWA employment in Missouri. TWA's primary domestic airport is in St. Louis and it has a maintenance facility in Kansas City, Missouri. Together the installations

There is evidence to suggest that they are not. Poorly skilled, poorly educated blacks have not gained as much from the efforts of the antidiscrimination agencies and affirmative action practices as have blacks with more education and skills.

For example, between 1959 and 1979 the productivity-corrected ratio of black-to-white earnings among professionals and managerial employees rose to 90 percent from 70 percent, while the comparable ratio for operatives and laborers remained constant at about

During the 1970s the black-towhite earnings ratio for male col-lege graduates rose to nearly 80 percent from 70 percent, while blacks with one to three years of high school actually lost ground to similarly educated whites

STAGS Are Novelty of Quiet Week

LONDON - The Eurobond active in the issue. market ended a quiet day slightly firmer Friday as short-covering ahead of the weekend emerged in both the dollar-straight and floating-rate-note sectors, dealers said. "No one wants to go home on a Friday with short positions outstanding," a trader said. Sentiment in these sectors was dominated this week by the U.S. Treasury's refunding auctions. which passed off to the market's satisfaction. "Everyone's relieved that the auctions are out of the way," a dealer at a U.S. bank com-

There was a steady flow of new bonds during the week, which included several innovative issues, dealers noted. Probably the most surprising new issue of the week was Quadrex Securities Ltd.'s package of zerocoupon bonds backed by British government securities. The issues are known as Sterling Transferable Accruing Government Securities,

The principal tranche of £100 million, which is due in 1998, was quoted by the lead manager at the close at around 27%, compared with the issue price of 26%. However, dealers said that trading was not nadian Imperial Bank of Com-

The 27 other tranches of the package, each totaling £7.75 million, were quoted at discounts of up to a full point below the issue prices, dealers noted.

A $100-million bond was launched during the day for United Technologies Financial Services. The 10-year issue pays 10% percent and was priced at 99%. It saw quotes of about 97% on the market immediately after the launch, but it eventually ended at about 97% bid, compared with the total fees of 2. Lead manager was Goldman Sachs merce led by CIBC Ltd. The five-year bond pays 10% percent and is priced at 100%. It closed on the market at about 98 13/16. The Rockefeller Center Properties Inc. package of $500 million of convertible Eurobonds had still not been formally launched by the close Friday. However, on the gray market both tranches of the issue were bid just below the issue prices. In the secondary market, dollar straights closed with gains of 1/2 or 4 point, dealers added. However, they again noted that trading was almost entirely inter-professional, with retail operators either on vacation or reluctant to enter the market because of uncertainty about the dollar's near-term trend.

A New Look for Buyouts management, supply 1 to 10 percent of the cost of an acquisition and represent most of the equity ownership. The buyout companies bring in some of their own money or, in lieu of a fee, take an equity interest.

But if the portfolios of the buyout companies are reminiscent of the conglomerate era, their management practices are just the op-

Synergy was the buzzword for the supposed benefits of conglomerates. It was believed that the successful conglomerate builder, such as Charles Bluhdorn of Gulf & Western Industries, could put diverse companies together and make their sum greater than their parts. "That's all been debunked," said Samuel L. Hayes of the Harvard Business School. "Instead of the presumption that the corporate entiry can add value, the current leveraged buyout fad suggests that if management is given its freedom unencumbered by corporate bureaucracy, it can do a lot better." These days, the investment concompanies together to effect any ton & Dubilier, said: "We are the combined two acquisitions, Proctor-Silex and Wear-Ever Aluminum Inc., to streamline operations,

For the most part, however, companies stay in their own backyards even if they are in related businesses. At Forstmann Little, for example, Beverage Management Inc., a 7-Up bottler, has no connection with Dr Pepper.

The only link between the companies it owns, said Theodore J. Forstmann, general partner in the firm, "is the dinner everybody comes to here twice a year." He described leveraged buyouts as "a hybrid business - not a corporation, not a holding company. Things are not hooked together through any structure."

To be sure, there are risks in assembling leveraged buyout com-panies. In a weak economy, the heavy debt loads of the companies may make them more vulnerable to collapse than the average corpora-

THE INTELLIGENCE MEN: Makers of the IQ Controversy

P SYCHOLOGICAL theories have a way of telling you something about the men who propound them as well as about the problems they are meant to explain. The debate over the meaning and nature of intelligence is a case in point, and Raymond E. Fancher, a professor of psychology at York University, Ontario, whose previous books include "Pioneers of Psychology," has had the excellent idea of tracing the history of the controversy in terms of the major personalities involved.

The first great dispute about intelligence has also proved the most enduring. How far are differences between individuals to be explained by external circumstances, how far by parentage? The battle lines between "nature" and "nurture" were originallydrawn up more than a century ago, with John Stuart Mill and Sir Francis Galton as the principal opposing spokesmen. Mill was a convinced environmentalist. Galton believed no less staunchly that hereditary factors were all-important. One thing these two eminent Victorians had in common, however - they had both been child prodigies, who received an intensive education at a very early age.

How did they come to derive such diametrically opposed conclusions from their experience? The chief reason, according to Fancher, is that they grew up with sharply contrasting self-images — "Mill up with sharply contrasting self-images — Mill was assiduously prevented from knowing how advanced he was, while Galton was constantly reminded of that fact." Galton's precocity was also more superficial; coddled by his family, above all by a crippled elder sister, his bothouse development did not prove much of an advantage once he was sent away to school, and as a student he failed to achieve the honors that he had set his heart on. In a sense his theories can be seen as providing a respect-able explanation for his disappointing academic record: he simply lacked the innate gifts for this particular kind of success.

With Mill, one suspects, the situation was more complex than Fancher allows. There was a side of him that rebelled against his father's notoriously crushing educational regime — the side that for a time attracted him to Thomas Carlyle — and he must surely have had moments when he jibbed at the idea that his great gifts (much greater than Galton's) were primarily the product of his environment. If he insisted quite so strenuously on the overwhelming significance of "outward circum-stances," it was for moral and political reasons, because he saw the tendency to regard differences between individuals as innate as "one of the greatest stumbling blocks to human improvement.

101 Berliner's re-fusal

By contrast Galton's conception of "human mprovement" led straight to his esponsal of engenics (he coined the term), and when he originated the dea of the intelligence test it was, as Fancher says, as "a eugenic screening device." Paradoxically, however, the first workable tests were devised by a man whose views were much closer to Mill's, the French psychologist Alfred Binet, who saw testing as a useful means of gauging subnormality, but who also believed that intelligence was fluid and shaped to a large extent by social and cultural Unfortunately those who built most directly on his work after his death — men like the American psychologists Robert Yerkes and Louis Terman, who perfected the notion of the IQ and turned testing into a major industry — did so in a very different spirit, the spirit of unrestrained Galtonians. It is symptomatic that Henry Herbert Goddard, his American translator, should have rendered his term for people with mildly subnormal mental abilities, "debiles" (literally, "weak ones"), with a harsh new term of his own - morons.

Fancher describes Goddard's views on the possible dangers of unrestricted immigration, though without quoting the dire pseudo-statistics about the alleged degree of feeble-mindedness among various groups that were proffered in order to make his point. To be fair, Goddard subsequently backed down, but a good deal of damage had already been done, and in the 1920s other psycholo-gists went even further.

gists went even further.

Fancher brings the story up to date with an account of the revulsion against the "IQ mystique" that began in the 1960s, of the controversy surrounding Arthur Jensen, and of the campaign against the hereditarians waged by Leon Kamin. En noute, he gives an account of the British psychologist Sir Cyril Burt, only one of a number of episodes in the book that suggest that the history of science quite often comes close to outright melodrama.

Cubs Get Triple Play, the Hard Way

ST. LOUIS — The Chicago Cubs pulled off a bizarre triple play in the eighth inning Thursday night, the first in the National League this season and first against the speedy Cardinals in nearly five years. With teammates Jack Clark and Andy Van Slyke on base, the Cardinals' Terry Pendleton lined out to first baseman Leon Durham.

Durham, attempting to force Clark at second, was too late with his throw to shortstop Chris Speier.

As Van Styke retreated to first, Speier's return throw hit him on the believe But Van Styke retreated to first, speier's return throw hit him on the helmet. But Van Slyke raced around second and passed Clark, who was trapped in a run down.

The official play, determined long after the game had ended, went from Durham to Speier to second baseman Ryne Sandberg to Speier to third baseman Ron Cey and, finally, to center fielder Bob Dernier.

Some Returned, Some Did Not

NEW YORK - There were a few major leaguers who did not resume playing Thursday night.
The New York Yankees' outfielder and star base stealer, Rickey

Henderson, apparently was caught at home in Oakland, California, and "will be fined heavily," according to the team's owner, George Pedro Guerrero, the slugging outfielder of the Los Angeles Dodg-ers, failed to make flight connections from the Dominican Republic and missed the game against the Cincinnati Reds.

And pitcher Pascual Perez, who had disappeared once before this season, vanished as the Atlanta Braves left for San Francisco. But he reappeared and was in uniform before their game ended. There is a discipline on this club that Rickey is going to find out about in a hurry," said Steinbrenner. "If he had gone somewhere and not been told by our own player rep to hang tough — if he went to the West Coast and couldn't get a flight back — but he left at 1:40 yesterday and the announcement" of a strike settlement "was made Henderson, who is batting .349, leads the American League in stolen bases with 50.

Said his manager, Billy Martin: "Maybe he'll stay out there in Oakland. We get there in a week."

Steve Brener, the Dodgers' director of publicity, said Guerrero had flown to Santo Domingo on Wednesday, arriving too late to catch a flight back, and failed to receive a wakeup call that would have allowed him to get Thursday's flight. Guerrero is the National League's second-leading hitter, with a 331 average, and has 27 home

Perez, who left the Braves in New York on July 21, which led to a 12-day stay on the suspended and restricted lists, finally got to Candlestick Park and said later, "I thought it was a 4:05 game."

The starting time was indeed 4:05 P.M. — Atlanta time. But that is 1:05 P.M. in San Francisco.

Two of the Giants' pitchers, Dave LaPoint and Mike Krukow, had gone home when the strike began and were absent Thursday. They reportedly were en route to San Francisco. First baseman Dan Driessen reported to Candlestick Park just 20 minutes before game time, and was scratched from the starting lineup.

Tewell Shoots Record 64, Can't Shake PGA Favorites

By Gordon S. White Jr. New York Times Service

DENVER — The first round of the 67th PGA Championship was reminiscent of the first round of the 114th British Open last month, because one of the tour's steady but average golfers, Doug Tewell, set a Cherry Hills Country Club course record of seven-under-par 64.

His effort Thursday came just 21 days after another journeyman, Christy O'Connor Jr. of Ireland, shot a course-record 64 for the first-round lead in the British Open at Royal St. George's. O'Connor did not go on to win the British Tewell is not among the favorites to win the PGA title, the fourth and last major tournament of the year, because he has won only two times in 11 years on the tour. He also has missed the cut three times and has withdrawn once in his last five outings, and he is suffering from back ailments so painful that he takes six aspirins during each round.

But the primary reason that Tewell, 35, might not win is found in the list of golfers in close pursuit. This includes Jack Nickiaus, winner of each of the four major tournaments at least once; Tom Watson, who has won each of the first three major tournaments at least once but not the PGA Championship, and Lee Trevino, the defending champion.

It was a day of thrilling shots executed in mile-high altitude. in bright, hot, windless weather, over a 7,089-yard (6,490-meter), par-71 course that Peter Jacobsen said was "easy." Jacobsen was one of four golfers in second place, just two shots behind Tewell at 66. The others were Nicklaus, Trevino and Corey Pavin. Watson was tied with Hubert Green and Danny Edwards

Despite a bogey 5 on the 18th hole. Tewell broke the 25-year-old Cherry Hills course record of 65 set by Arnold Palmer in the final round of the 1960 U.S. Open. That 65 gave Palmer his only U.S. Open title. Thursday, Palmer shot 75.

"My card will be hanging on my wall at home until someone breaks the record," Tewell said. "I hope "The it's a long time."

when he got an eagle 3 on the 555yard, par-5 17th hole. That got his score to eight under par before he took the bogey on the 491-yard, par-4 18th. He put his second shot into a bunker and could not get up and down with one putt.

Laughing at his gamble, he said: I can hit a two-iron 212 yards, so I had plenty to spare. That's why l changed my mind and went for it."

He barely got that two-iron shot over the creek, missing the far bank by about a foot. The ball bounced to a stop six feet (1.8 meters) from the cup, and he sank the putt for the eagle 3. That he hit into the high grass between the creek and the green prevented his ball from bounding over the back of the

There were other lucky shots. Jacobsen holed out from two bunkers in a row, at 15 and 16, after chipping in from the fringe for a birdie at 11. Morris Hatalsky finished at 68 after holing a 198-yard five-iron shot for an eagle 2 on 18.

And Trevino, who at age 44 last year won this title at Shoal Creek in Alabama, got the lucky bounce of the day. He had just taken a dou-Tewell. ■ Fans Are Not So Lucky

As Watson, Greg Norman and Andy Bean were playing the 12th hole before one of the biggest galleries of the day, the bridge over a small creek on the Cherry Hills Country Club course sagged into the water under the weight of spectators, soaking several people,

About 100 spectators had crowded onto the metal and wood bridge to the left of the 12th green to get a glimpse of Watson's tee shot. The bridge spans a shallow creek and is normally used by carts.

The middle of the bridge caved back to three under par. Like and taking several spectators with it. Some got wet up to their knees, but no one was injured.

An Accidental Plunge Muddies Track

By Andrew Beyer

SARATOGA SPRINGS, New York - New Yorkers are suspicious souls, and New York harness bettors hold an especially conspiratorial view of the world. So it was very easy for the crowd at Yonkers Raceway on a recent night to conclude that it was witnessing a brazen display of larceny.

Cagey Hero was the 3-to-5 favorite and Mr. Escon the 5-to-2 second choice as the field approached the starting gate. There was so much money in the wagering pool that even a big bet should not have affected the odds, but when the tote board blinked for the final time. Mr. Escort's price plunged to 4 to 5 while Cagey Hero rose to 8 to 5.

That final flurry of betting was so strong that it suggested the outcome was a foregone conclusion, and the crowd started booing as soon as the race began.

After Mr. Escort had won with ease, irate bettors screamed and threw debris at him in the winner's circle. The crowd was in an ugly mood for the rest of the night, and numerous bettors probably went home to worry after the horses had gone a half-mile and the with a renewed conviction that the game is hopelessly fearless player," said a friend, who witnessed and verified the whole incident with Mr. Escort.

"I knew Mr. Escort was the best horse," said Jimmy. "It was just basic handicapping. I was going to bet somewhere between $4,000 and $6,000."

Jimmy always bets at the last moment, so he went to the window just as the field was on gait and called out his wager. As he started to bet, however, one horse failed to get up to the starting gate and the starter ordered a recall. The field had to regroup, delaying the start for a couple of minutes.

As this was happening. Jimmy's mutuel clerk had punched out a $1,000 wager on Mr. Escort and hit the "Repeat" button on his machine. The tickets came flying out - and kept coming.

The size of Jimmy's bet kept growing. It had reached $21,000 when the race started and all the mutuel machines at the track were automatically shut off. He had only a moment to decide what to do. "I'll take it!" he told the mutuel clerk. Jimmy is well known at the track, and the mutuel clerk knew he was good for the money. But neither had Cram Just Misses Setting 4th Record GATESHEAD, England (AP) — Britain's Steve Cram ran the second-fastest 1.000 meters Friday night, barely missing in an attempt to set a fourth world record in 24 days.

Running on his local track, Cram. 24, was timed in 2 minutes 12:85 seconds, just short of the record of 2:12.18 set by Sebastian Coe of Britain

Cram broke countryman Steve Overt's 1,500-meter record in Nice on July 16: 11 days later, in Oslo, he broke Coe's mark for the mile and in Budapest, five days ago, he broke the nine-year-old 2,000-meter record of New Zealand's John Walker.

JAPAN POSTCARD

The 'Survival' Warriors

By Leslie Brody
The Associated Press

ATSUGI, Japan — An import from the United States is becoming a rage in Japan: the Survival Game, where young people dress up in U.S. Army combat uniforms and spend weekends in the woods playing war.
"Japan has been in a peaceful period for many years," said Taka-shi Kawamoto, who brought the fad to Japan from California two years ago, "That's not to say we want to wage war, but the game shares a fundamental point with judo; you're against an adversary."

The simple rules — steal the other team's flag before you get shot — have attracted about 30,000 players across the country, Kawamoto said. Although most are in their 20s and early 30s, the game is catching on among junior high school students, despite a ban on purchases of toy guns by children under 18. The guns shoot plastic pellets.

Nobody thinks about getting shot, only about shooting the enemy," said one weary "soldier" after a recent game near Atsugi airfield southwest of Tokyo. The field was a World War II base for Japanese kamikaze pilots and is now a U.S.

The dog-tagged players offered various reasons for joining the game on a sweltering Sunday; a chance to get out of the city, be a hero, find friends, lose weight.

Akiko Shibazaki, one of three women among 75 men, said, with a giggle, that s'e came to "hunt more than flags."

"The game's a great way to get rid of stress," said Shigeru Nakasugi, a storekeeper. "Japan may be rich, but life is still hard. There's so little space, and you have to bow down to your boss at work. Survival' is even better than baseball because there are no fixed positions."

Warning for Explicit Lyrics The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Nineteen top record companies, which market 80 percent of the recorded music in he United States, have proposed a label warning buyers of sexually explicit lyrics. The Recording Industry Association of America said in a letter to the Washington-based Parents' Music Resource Center that wording of the label remained to be discussed.

The participants dress up like U.S. soldiers, with combat boots, web belts and shoulder patches, and with plastic goggles to protect the eyes from the pellets.

"Dressing up makes us feel like actors," said Toshio Arai, a 25year-old security guard, decorating his face with camouflage paint. "We don't have any direct experience with war, so we know about it mostly from American movies like 'The Deer Hunter' and 'M*A*S*H' Besides, Japan lost. Instead of continuing the losing feeling the older reople keep, we'd rather imitate winners." He thumbed his uniform collar proudly, "It's authentic from '43." "It would look really strange if we walked down the street dressed like the Imperial Army, don't you think?" a teammate suggested.

"It's just a game," said another.
"Don't think about it too hard, or you'll think we like the military. It's exciting to hide in the forest, without knowing whether there's someone nearby trying to get you.

"It's not like real life. We like to play war, but don't want a real

Japan's postwar constitution limits its military to a defensive role, and the government keeps de-fense spending below I percent of the gross national product.

In an indication of the Survival Game's popularity, Makoto Tobo. manager of the Ogen gun store in Tokyo, said his tiny shop made more than 30 million yen (about $125,000) off the game last year. 8.000 replica of a military rifle costs 8,000 yen (about $34), with some of the most prestigious models going for more than 100,000 yen.

About 50 hobby and toy stores in Japan sell the equipment for the game, according to Combat magazine, the bible for devoted players, who hope to form a national association soon.

One who expressed shock at the whole thing was an American writ-er, David Klass. He noted that a surfer's haunt near his home in the coastal resort of Atami had started selling toy guns.

"At a time when American companies are desperate to get their goods into Japan, it's ironic that this game is what the Japanese choose to import," he said.

Video Age at the Vatican: TV Center Covers All

By E. J. Dionne New York Times Service

ROME — The Vatican, which over the decades has developed sophisticated press and radio operations, is now trying to come to terms with the video age. It is doing so by means of the Vatican Television Center, which was founded in 1983 with the mission of documenting all of Pope John Paul II's activities.

The center, known as CTV after its Italian name, is serving as a supplement to John Paul's success in winning the Catholic Church an almost permanent place in the secular media. More than just a technological device, the center is a symbol for the kind of papacy John Paul is conducting. His friends and critics alike refer to him as a "populist," a label that refers as much to the methods he uses as to the content of his ideas. His frequent trips abroad have provided him with vast new audiences. And the journeys are orga-nized not simply to reach those who turn out for the mass gatherings but for the millions more who watch on television. By traveling so much, the pope has created a series of events - and backdrops - that the media often find mselves unable to resist.

"Television usually finds the pope irresistible," said Richard Roth, a Rome correspondent for CBS News who has accompanied the pope on 17 of his 27 foreign trips. There are three ractions, which I would refer to as exotica, spectacle and politics. His trips are a combination of all three, and even when there is not news, which would be the politics, there is almost guaranteed exotica and spectacle. And what could be more exotic and spectacular than going to the heart of Africa?"

Given the secular media's fascination with the pope, what func-tion is CTV to serve? "We are not a network or a television station," said Fiorenzo Tagliabue, secretary-general of the center. Its primary task, he said, is straightforward: "We re-cord everything the pope does in public — in the Vatican, in Italy, around the world."

Archbishop John P. Foley, head of the Pontifical Commission for Social Communications, said CTV was more like a press

The pope has put the secular media, particularly television, to work for him.

words and actions of the pope are documented in printed form by the Press Office and The Osservatore Romano and in audio form by the Vatican Radio," he said, so they are documented in video form by CTV."

In doing this, the center attempts to fill gaps left by secular television coverage. For instance, it records public rosaries said by the pope, and his weekly Angelus. These are mainly of interest to the devout, unless the pope uses the occasions to make statements on controversial public questions.

The Africa trip offers other evi-dence of the role CTV plays. On July 31, 10 days before his departure for Africa, the pope sat down with a CTV crew at his summer residence, Castel Gondolfo, and taped brief messages for each of the seven countries he is to visit,

Generally, they are simply greetings in which the pope says how happy he is to visit the coun-office than a network. "Just as the ury. Videotapes of the messages words and actions of the pope are were shipped to the Varican nunciatures in the various countries and used in effect as promotional spots for the pope's visit. They are usually given free to state television networks and other television stations interested in them.

Egidio Maggioni, an official of the Vatican television operation, said that the Africa trip underlined another CTV service: "It's important to understand that the television stations in many Third-World countries have very little money. They simply cannot af-ford to cover the pope. We can provide them with the footage they want and need."

Thus, he continued, CTV plans to produce a documentary on the Africa trip soon after the Pope returns Aug. 20, aimed mainly for distribution to African television stations that are financially unable to cover the pope's visit beyoud their own countries.

mentaries resulted from the pope's visit last year to Vietnam-ese refugees in Thailand. The narration was simply the pope's ad-dress to a group of diplomats about the plight of the displaced. "The conscience of humanity must be made ever more aware of the evils of the situation," the pope declares, while the pictures show naked and half-naked chil-

Archbishop Foley said among the most popular videotapes are one of the pope's visit to the shrine at Lourdes and another called "The Pardon," on the pope's prison visit to Mehmet Ali Agea, the man convicted of shoot-

Will we someday find a John Paul video next to the latest Madonna rock tape? There have been some discussions between Vatican officials and representatives of commercial distributors, but Foley said that so far the Vatican had preferred religious outlets.

"We want to be certain of the the large trade in pornographic videotapes. The Vatican sells the distributor the rights to reproduce the tapes, he said, with further proceeds going to the distributor. One source of money for the character of the companies we're dealing with," he said, alluding to Vatican Television Center, which under its charter must be selffinancing, is the sale of videotapes from papal audiences. But to avoid a trade in pure "vanity" shots with the pope, the center sells videos that include the pope's message during the audience. "We try to ensure that it fulfills a religious purpose," the archbishop said.

Tagliabue would not discuss the financing of the center. Although the constant videotaping of the pope is an expensive propo-sition. CTV is believed to be a low-budget operation. Its headquarters are crammed into a few rooms in a corner of Vatican City. and much of the equipment has been donated.

The commercial networks have feared that the creation of CTV would result in their having less access to the pope. Traditionally, "pool" coverage was in the hands of RAI, the Italian state television network. Direct Vatican control of pictures of the pope led to fears censorshi

Foley said that the Vatican had actively sought to avoid a "mo-nopoly." "We always try to include other media," he said. In the occasional situation where Vatican television has an "unexpected monopoly," catching a scene just because it records the pope everywhere, the center gives its film free to networks requesting it.

In cases where networks could have had access to a papal event but chose not to come, he continued, the center charges a fee for the film.

Foley said CTV was looking into projects on the Vatican's art treasures, its museum and library, and on St. Peter's Basilica, Longer-term projects might involve programs on the lives of saints and on the relationship between religion and culture.
But Foley and Maggioni both said these projects were still some time away. "We do everything according to the length of our feet," Massioni said with a smile, "and Maggioni said with a smile, ' we're still growing.
